1. A secret agreement is reported to have been signed, toward the end of 1953, between the USSR and Poland. This is supposed to have modified the earlier Soviet-Polish military treaty, signed immediately after World War II. One clause in the secret agreement establishes a unified command for all supply services of the Soviet and Polish armies, when operating on Polish territory.
2. Another clause concerns Polish political prisoners, now detained by the Soviets in the USSR. These prisoners are to be turned over to the Polish authorities. Some will be freed, others sent to Polish prisons.
3. The Polish Government has accepted a further clause in this agreement, under which Polish military units will be included in large Soviet units stationed in Poland. At the same time, special Soviet units will be included in armored, aviation, and communications units of the Polish Army.
